

REVOLVER

ISSUE 142
AUG X SEPT 2018

THE RULE
BREAKERS
ISSUE

YOUTH CODE

Ho99o9 // Nothing // Power Trip // Nicole Dollanganger // Bam Margera // Vein
Nine Inch Nails // SeeYouSpaceCowboy // Zeal & Ardor // Wicca Phase Springs Eternal

11

Five Artists You Need to Know Now

SeeYouSpaceCowboy, Nervosa, Vein and more

34

Ho99o9

How a rap-punk duo from New Jersey is reinventing two genres at once

42

Power Trip

Don't expect these Dallas thrashers to stop pushing musical boundaries and wearing their progressive politics on their sleeves

58

Nothing

Domenic Palermo's troubled past drives him to find shoegazing beauty in a world full of pain

66

Muslim Girl, Syrian Refugee, Metalhead

An 18-year-old from Aleppo escapes a world where the music she loves is taboo

72

Zeal & Ardor

From pissing off black-metal purists to branding fans

90

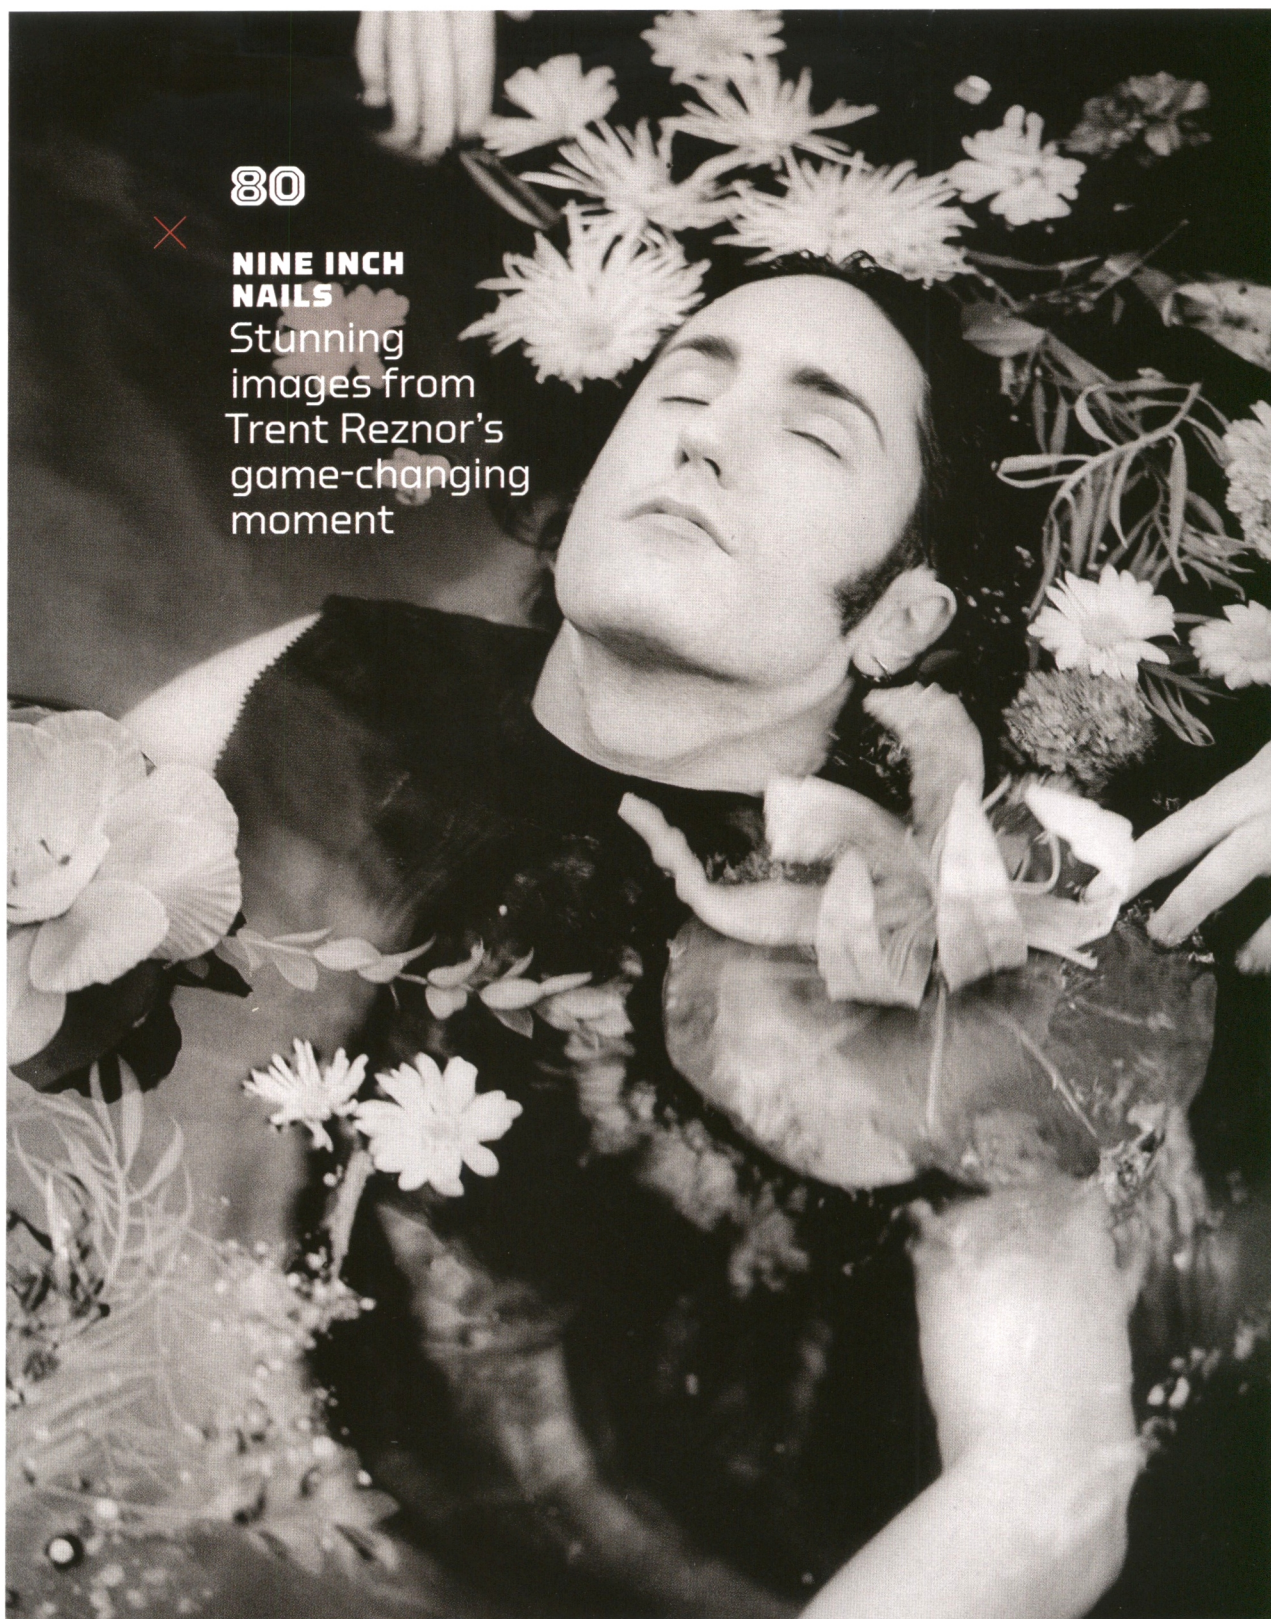

Bam Margera

The Jackass star may be sober now, but he's still making trouble

80

NINE INCH NAILS

Stunning images from Trent Reznor's game-changing moment

Nine Inch Nails

PHOTOGRAPHY Joseph Cultice

In 1988, Trent Reznor emerged from Cleveland, Ohio, with a demo tape of dark industrial songs and a modest dream of releasing a 12-inch single. No one could have predicted that his uncompromising vision and iconoclastic spirit would lead Nine Inch Nails to become one of the most commercially successful and creatively influential bands of the Nineties. In particular, the period around 1992's Broken and 1994's The Downward Spiral saw Reznor testing the limits of art, propriety and his own damaged psyche in a frenzy of confrontational music, visuals and live performances that somehow resonated with the masses. Here, we look back at that game-changing moment.

